MIGNOLA

Journal of 1st Sgt. George Whitman, USA
12/23/44
East Bromwich, England.

We've been here for two days now and it isn't getting any better. All of the men are jittery in this place. Maybe if it had a name. Maybe if the people in the village would even talk about it. But they won't.

Not even telling them there could be a crack team of Nazi commandos lurking about somewheres gets anything out of them. They just look at you like Nazis are maybe the last thing in the world they need to worry about.

If that were true, we wouldn't be here.

Okay--this is what we think we know: Hitler has sent some kind of team to England. I called them commandos, but there's a trio of people from the British Paranormal Society who say they're more than that. They say the Germans are some kind of spook squad. That the krauts are here to perform some kind of spell or something. Summon monsters. Raise the dead.

Yeah, right.

DARKHORSE.COM

But whatever it is, it's got the top brass worried enough to send a special Ranger unit to look into it. And the Torch of Liberty is here with us. Funny to see him standing there, having a cup of joe with the rest of the guys. I'm more used to seeing him jumping around in newsreels, fighting some cockamamie Nazi menace.

Seems like an O.K. guy, though. And he believes this whole business. He says his own sources confirm the Nazis are in the final stages of something called "Project Ragna Rok".

I don't think our Limey friends were too thrilled to learn it took the Torch's word to make us believe them.

There's three of them:

Professor Malcolm Frost, from Blackfriar's College, stateside.

Trevor Bruttenholm (pronounced "Broom"), who's some kind of paranormal Whiz Kid.

And Lady Cynthia Eden-Jones, who's supposed to be England's top medium.

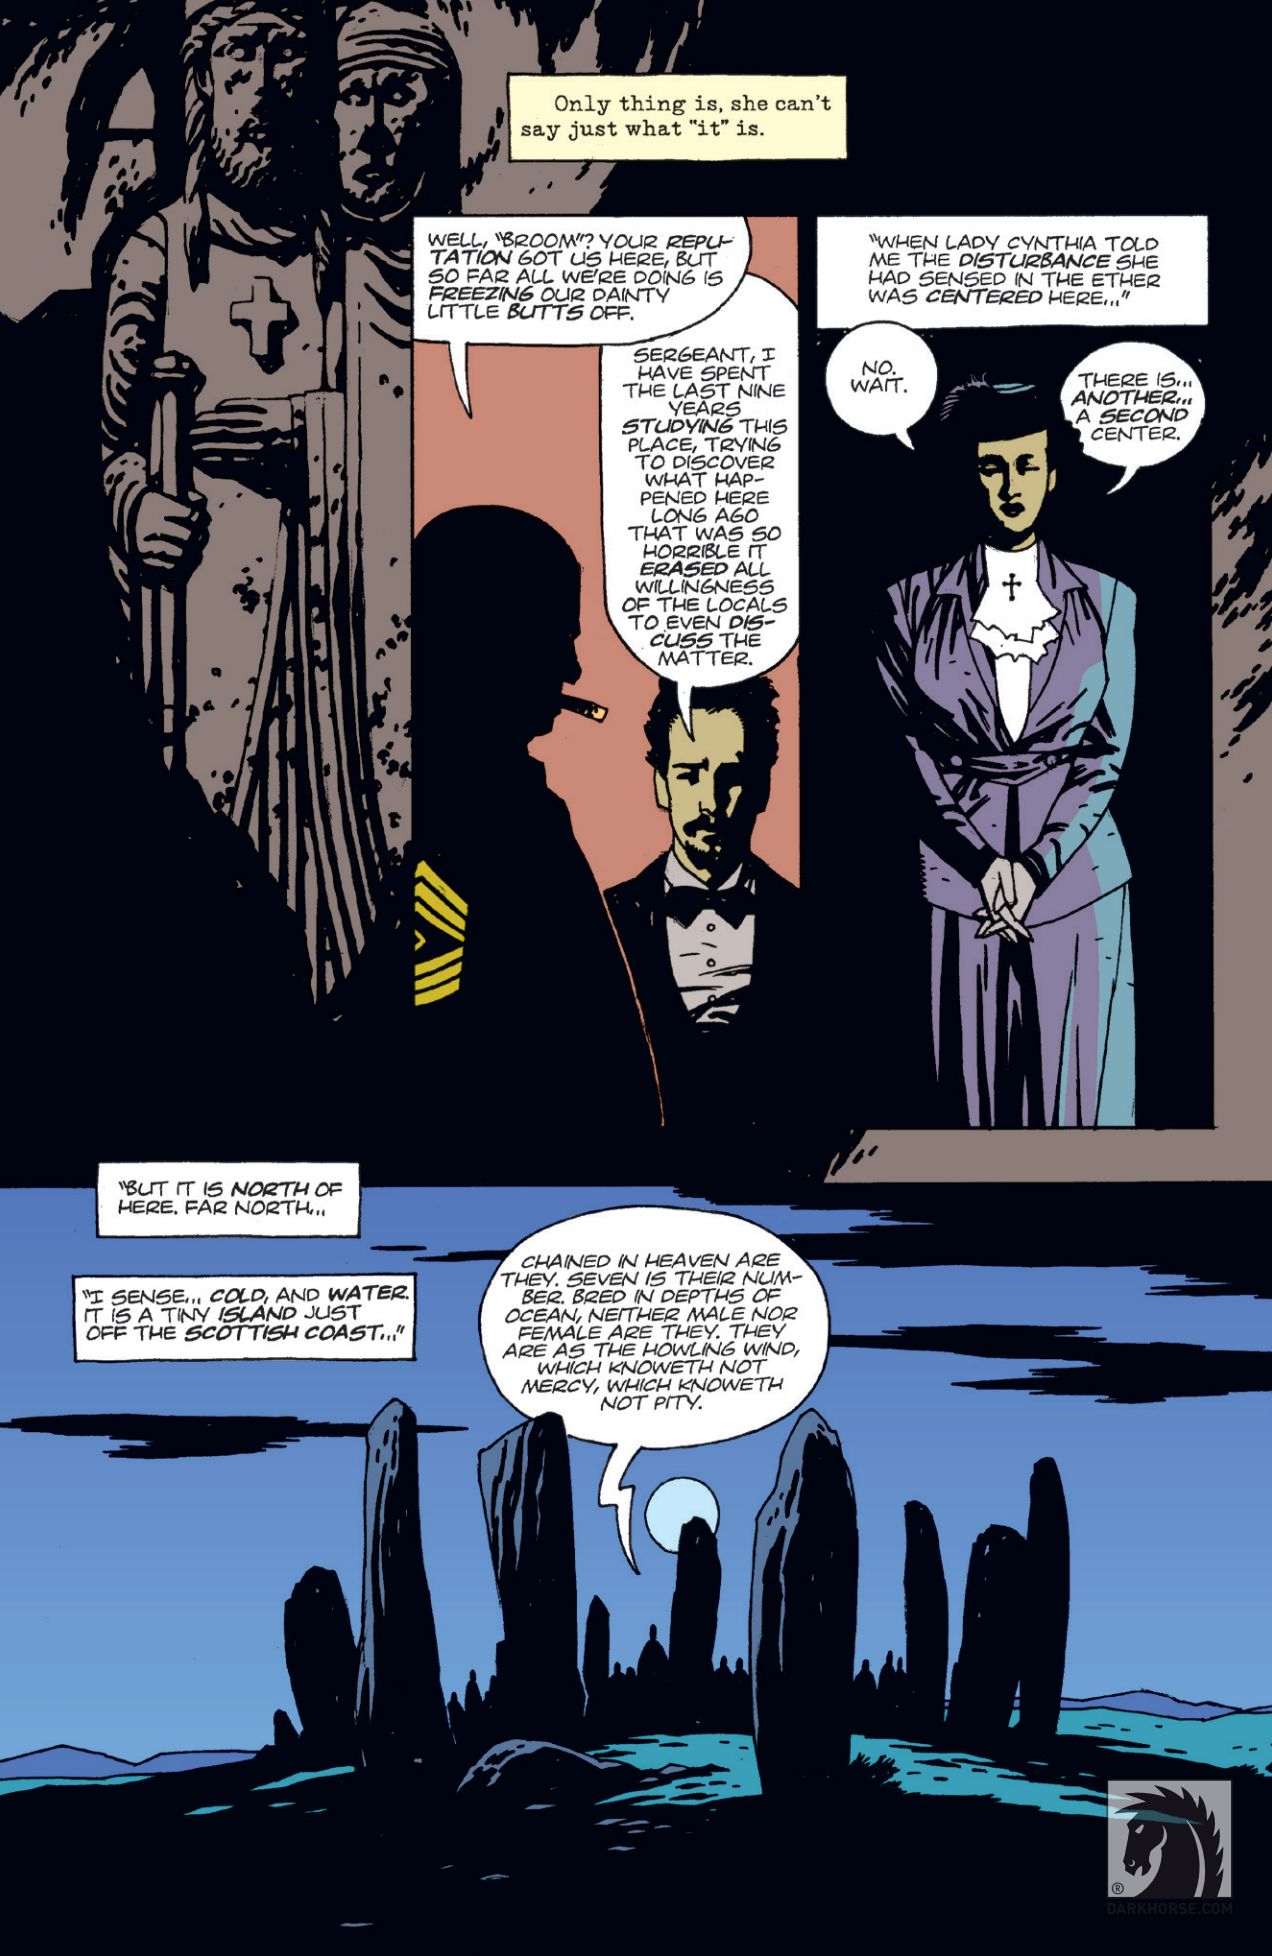

And in charge of this whole Looney Toon party is me, a guy who'd never even heard the word "paranormal" before a week ago.

Anyway, two days camped out in this holiday camp and so far nothing. No spooks. No monsters. No Nazis.

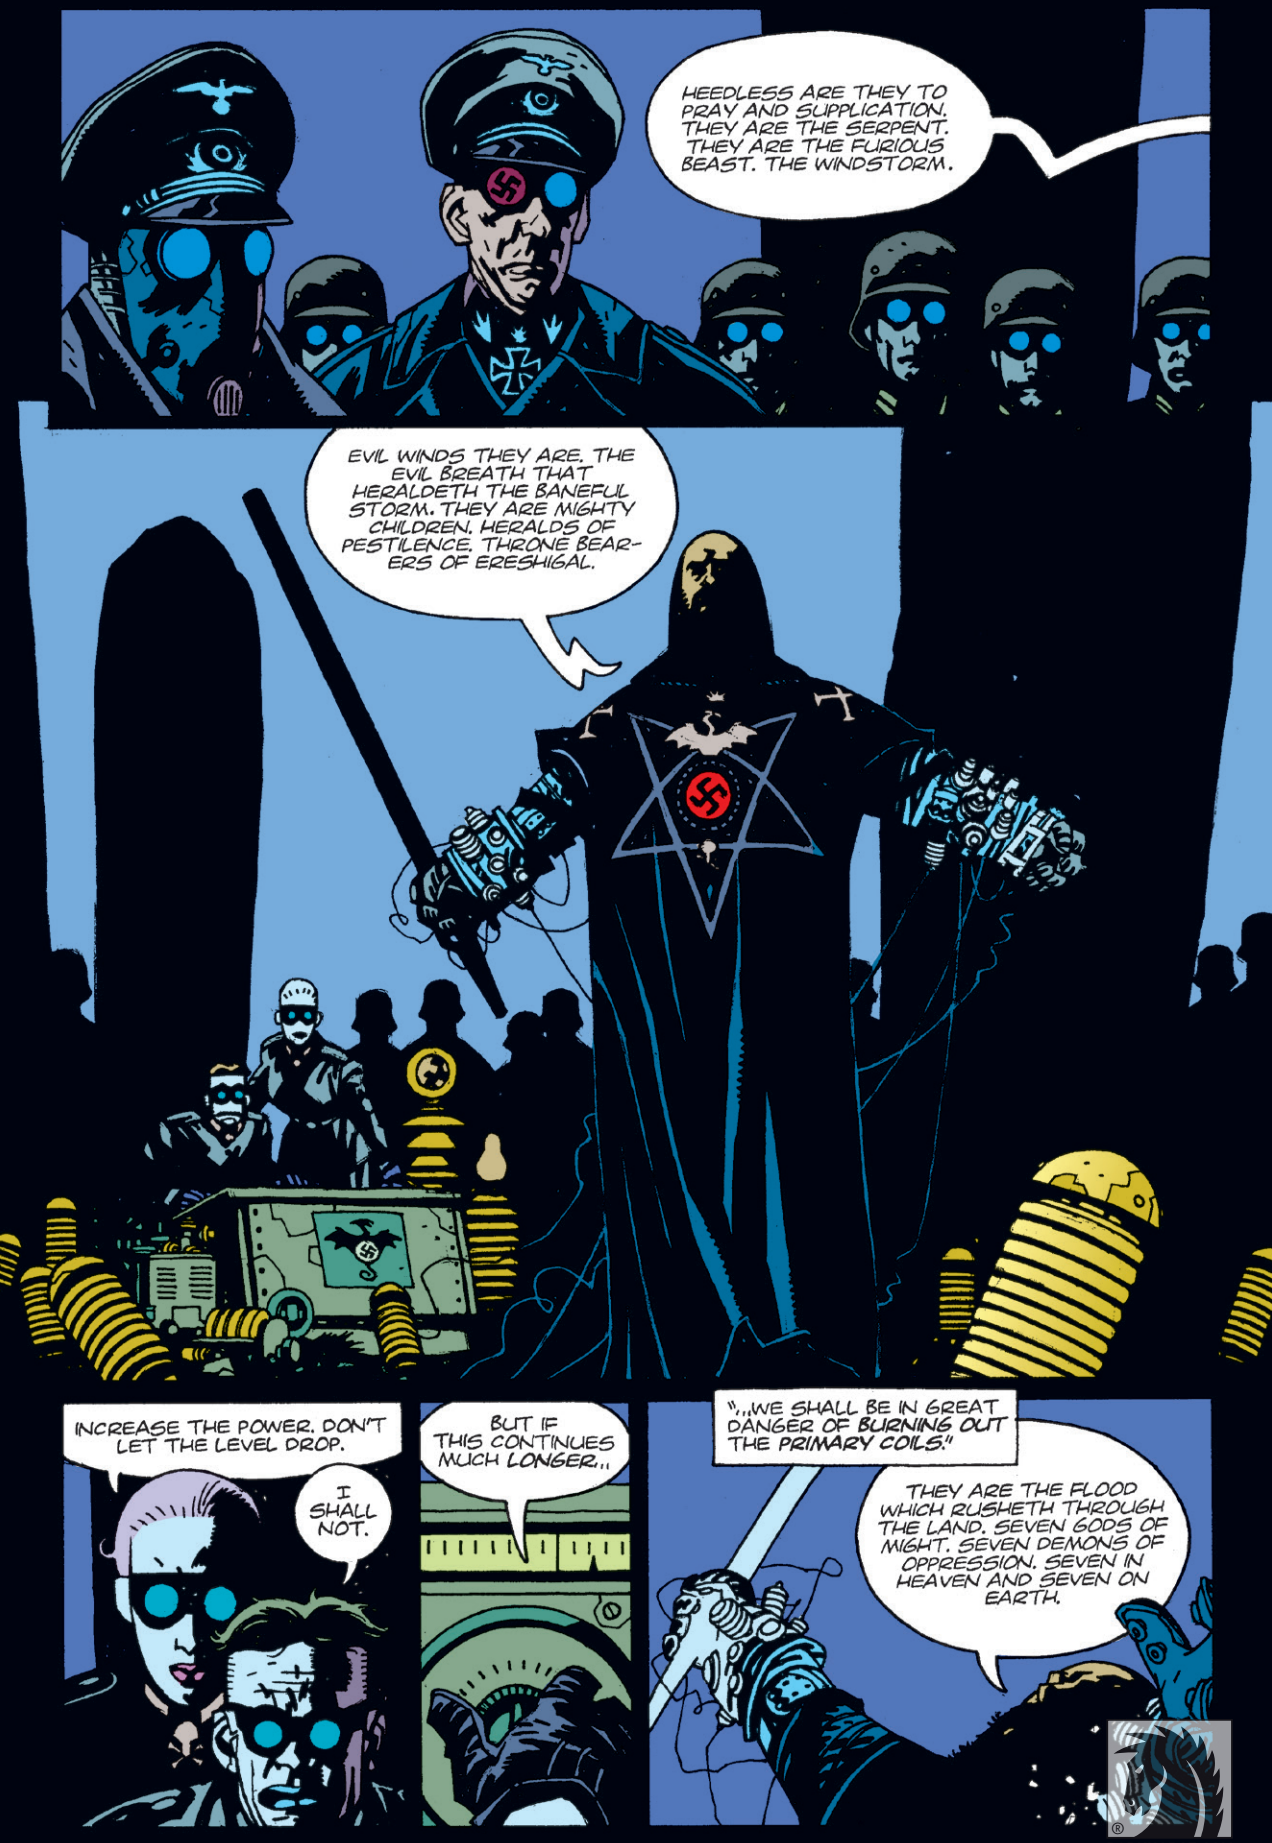

But Lady Cynthia says it's going to happen here. And it's going to happen tonight.
