PLANETES OMNIBUS

It's the late twenty-first century. People now live on the Moon and Mars, and for some, space is still an epic adventure. But much of the time, space is an everyday job . . . and an unglamorous and dangerous one—done by astronauts like Hachimaki "Hachi" Hoshino, Fee Carmichael, and Yuri Mikhalkov, as they orbit the Earth in the ramshackle vessel DS-12 Toy Box. Their task is helping to clean up the mess human beings have brought along with them into space—over a hundred years of debris circling the world at eight kilometers per second, posing a deadly threat to travelers.

Also available in a deluxe edition featuring debossed cover patterns with a tactile effect and metallic copper gilded edges, inspired by elements of the International Space Station.

SOMETHING'S WRONG HERE . . .

You sense it, somehow. You suspect this story doesn't really go the way it should. You're suspicious! But a smooth talker like Reigen would know what to say at this point. "Just flip the book around and start reading it the other way instead." Aha! So this was really the last page of the book. You're saved! Thank you, Reigen-sensei! "Now, about my fee . . . "

Prologue

Long ago, those who lived in this land believed death was the first step towards another life.

When someone draws their last breath,
it is said to be the beginning of a long journey toward rebirth.

Imagine that the final moment of your life just ended.
When your consciousness returns from the darkness and you suddenly open your eyes again, the pile of dirt that covered your cold body, or the breeze that carried your ashes, will have quietly disappeared. Perhaps it's a place you've visited hundreds of times before; the familiar light of purgatory surrounds you.

If you follow that light, you'll soon see the boundary that separates life and death. We, the people of purgatory, call this boundary Breath's End. It's a name that signifies the last place where the breath of the living reaches.

Beyond Breath's End lies the purgatory plains. The deceased goes on a long journey toward the Gate of Rebirth that lies at the end of the plains.

Crossing Breath's End is the first step of the journey.

One of the three crow gods that protect the purgatory boundary will be waiting for you at an open door in Breath's End. It will open its black beak and tell you about the purgatory plains that you will need to cross.

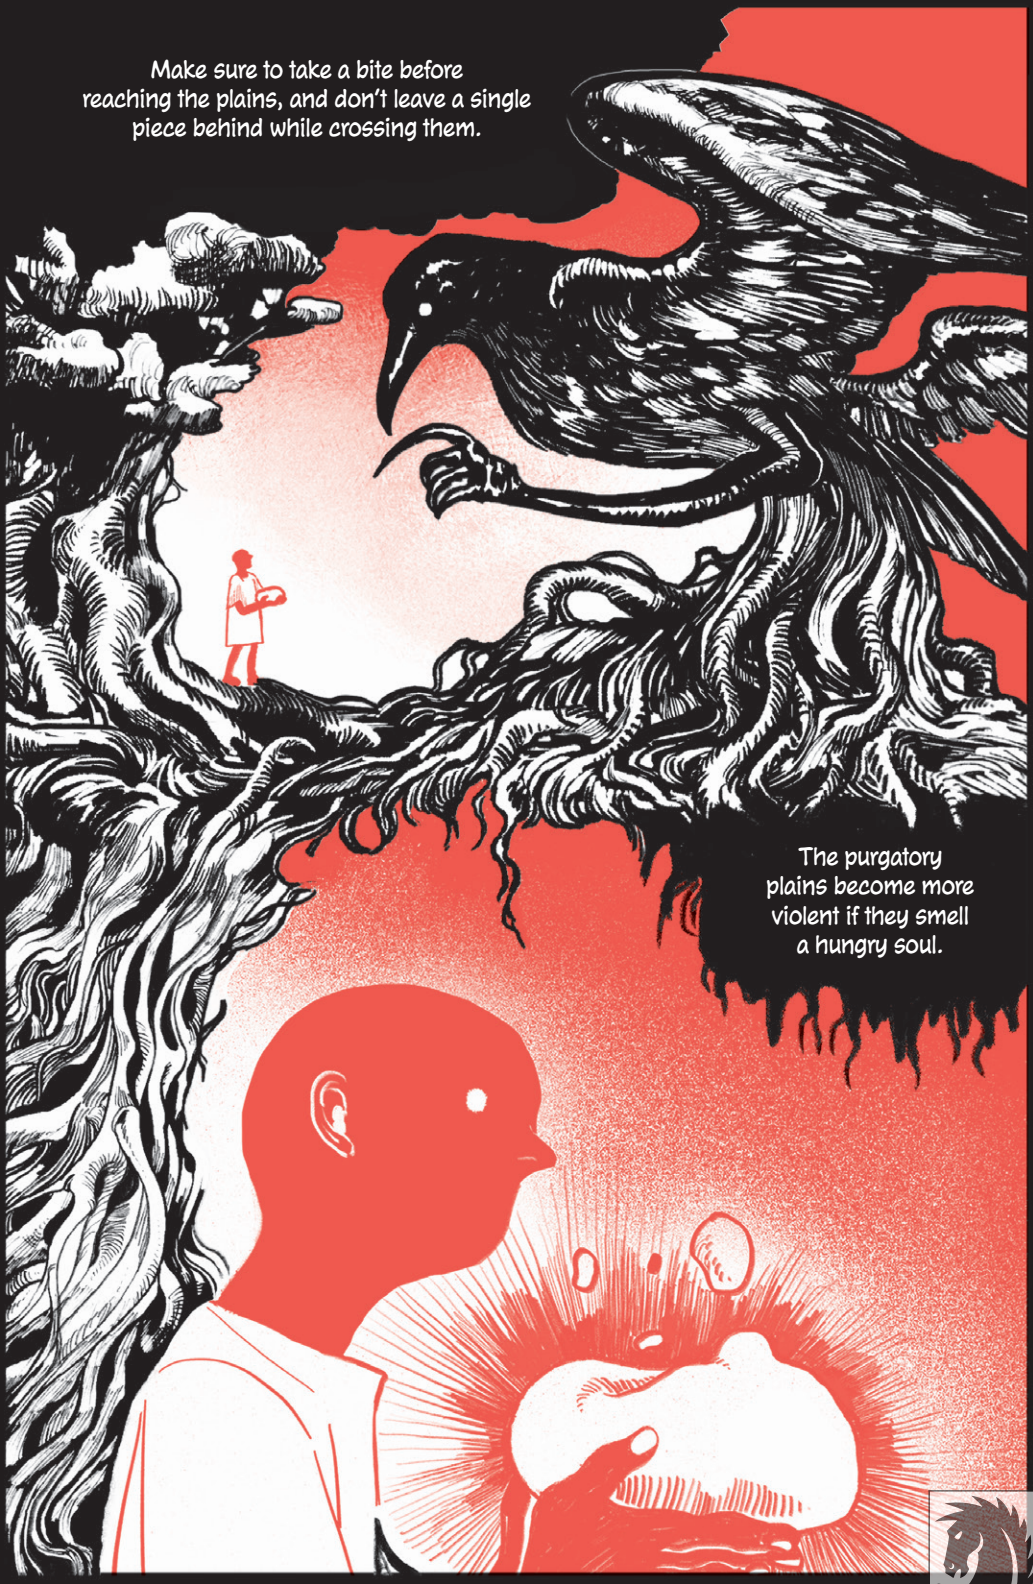

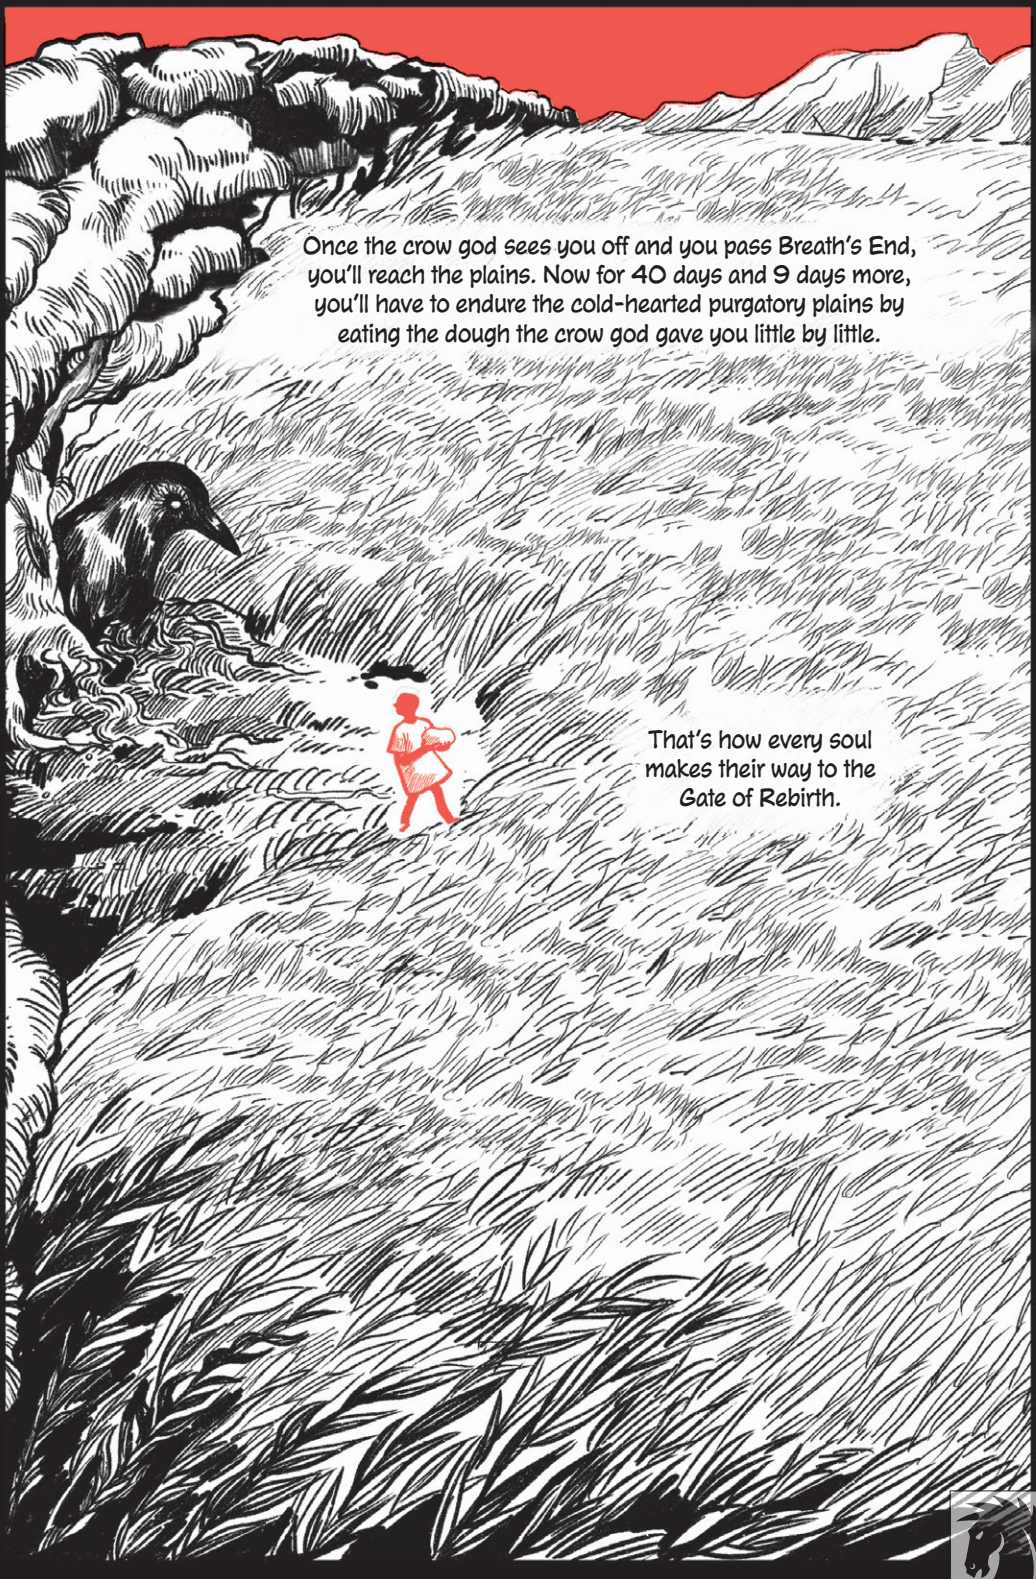

It will tell you how desolate the endless plains are going to be for the next 49 days, why you should only drink from the well that is built out of redstone, why you shouldn't listen to the dead deer, and why you shouldn't look at the moon with your bare eyes on the third night.

It will also tell you how painful it is to throw away 49 precious memories from your life, one each day.

Once all your stories are told,
the crow god will knead you a dough
mixed with grain, blood, and honey.
It's the only thing you can safely eat in purgatory.
It's very sweet and unbelievably soft.

Make sure to take a bite before reaching the plains, and don't leave a single piece behind while crossing them.
The purgatory plains become more violent if they smell a hungry soul.

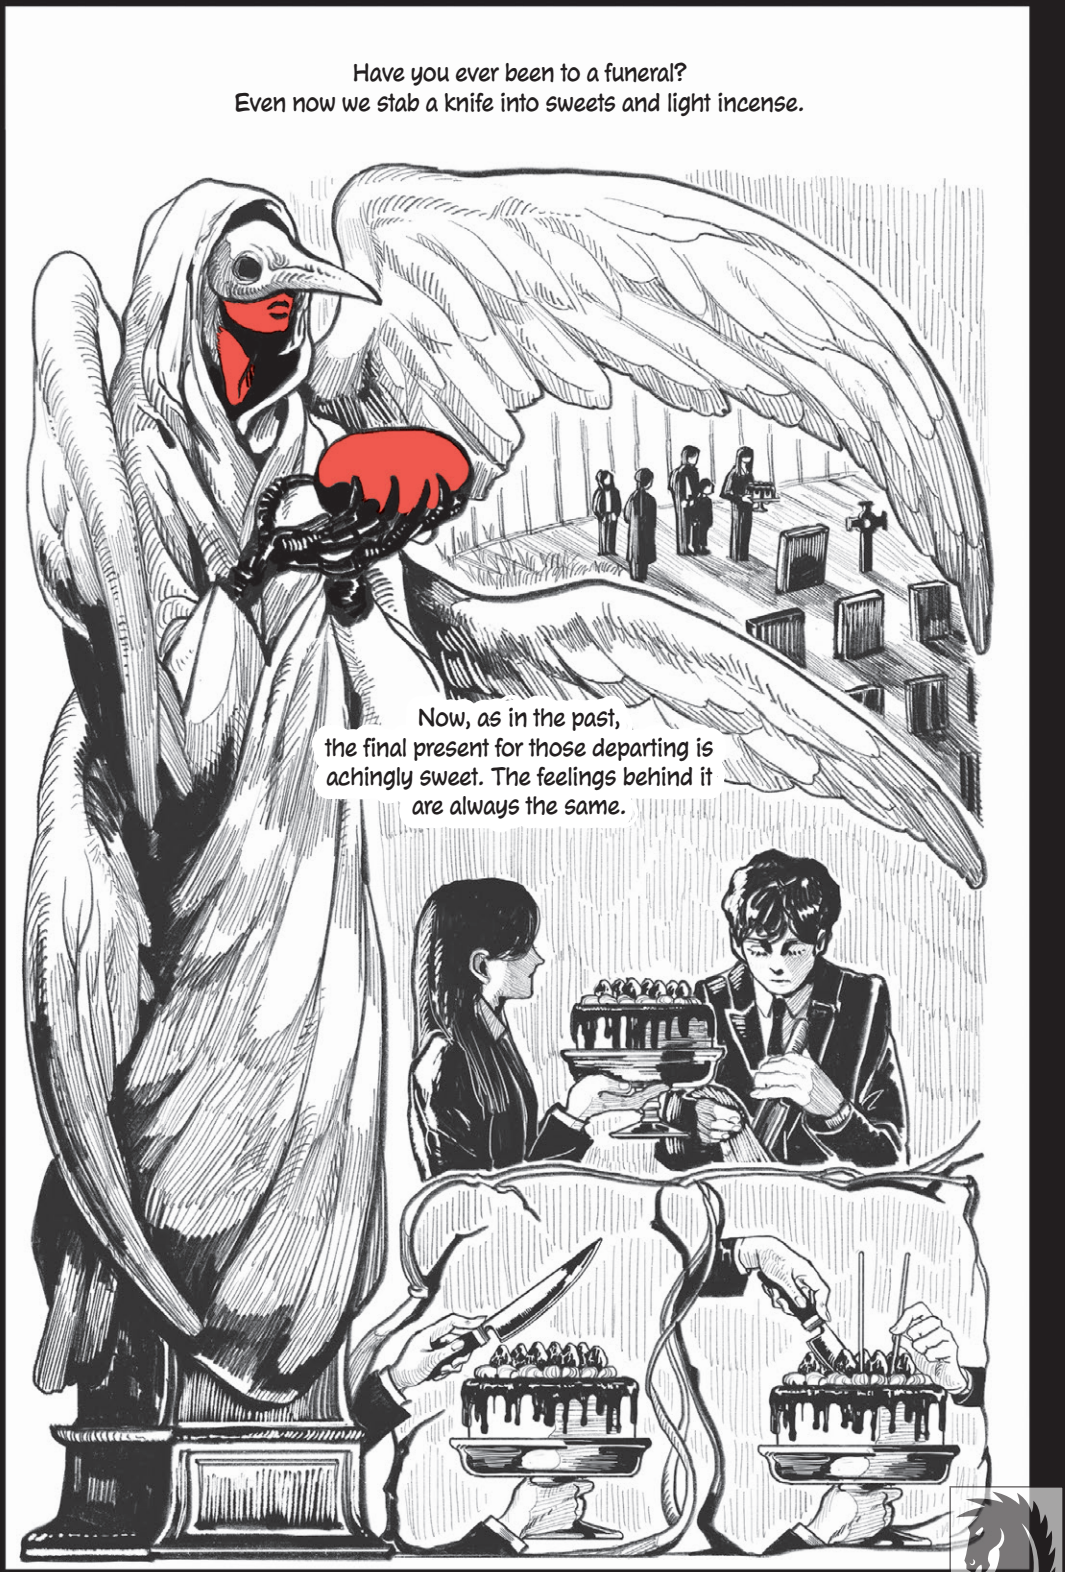

Once the crow god sees you off and you pass Breath's End, you'll reach the plains. Now for 40 days and 9 days more, you'll have to endure the cold-hearted purgatory plains by eating the dough the crow god gave you little by little.
That's how every soul makes their way to the Gate of Rebirth.

After a few shadows from purgatory descended to the land of the living and told this story, people started placing treats made of sweet-tasting dough at funerals.

When the day of the funeral came, it didn't matter what the ingredients were or how they were shaped, everything was carefully made and filled up large plates.

Each piece of dough was cut so that the dead could take every last bite, and incense was lit so that the smoke could reach the world beyond.

Have you ever been to a funeral?
Even now we stab a knife into sweets and light incense.
Now, as in the past,
the final present for those departing is achingly sweet. The feelings behind it are always the same.

May our loved ones not grow weary on their long journey.
서천공동묘원
Seocheon Public Cemetery
May they feel no pain or suffering.
부아앙
VROOM
May they neither cry nor feel lonely in that far away place.

May they forget the cold and hunger and safely reach the Gate of Rebirth without fear or distress.

And if possible, may we meet again in our next life.
